What Makes You Think You're Worthy of Computer Science?

This might be the type of essay question students dread.

- I had no idea what the Professor wanted!

- The Professor graded me down because I didn't say exactly what they wanted me to say!

And more... but the TL;DR is usually some whining about something irrelevant when really the student missed the point behind the question.

But maybe this essay is a little different? Or is it?

What's the "Prompt"?

You've seen it already: "What makes you think you're worthy of Computer Science?"

You're trying to join MY field, MY craft, MY passion.

What makes you think you're worthy of working in this field?

How To Answer This Successfully?

I'm not looking for a specific answer.

I'm looking for a specific kind of answer.

Here's what's different about this essay:

- You can convene yourselves in any size or number of groups you want.

- Meet as often as you want.

- In the group setting, decide what you think the point behind the question is. Not what the answer is. Rather, what's the question behind the question?

Then individually write your essay in your own way.

Requirements

- Five hundred words plus or minus ten percent.

- Plain text document.

- Zero or close to zero spelling errors.

- Stating anything beyond this provides too much information.

The vagueness you find here is intentional.
